Reading is a skill that enables students to acquire knowledge in their content area classes. Yet teachers are often frustrated when they try to meet their students' needs only to find their instructional plans impeded by their students' failure to comprehend their textbooks efficiently. Thus, a prime concern of educators today is how to help students become competent readers by using variety of passages to according knowledge in the various content areas.

The present book presents research-based practices reading and promotes the development of the reading little a variety of ways throughout one semester and enables learners to roceed smoothly from one lesson to another. The purpo e cathe book is to prepare students (esp. physical education) for SP cauries.

A needs analysis was run to select proper opics in terms of intended learners' interest, their proficiency liver and the difficulty of the passages. As a result, texts allow the communicative aspects of learning to be fostered and linguistic competence to be developed. Further, the authentic and interesting nature of the reading passages stimulates the expression of ideas in both controlled and free discussions. The book consists of reading pale ages and a number of activities in all units, each of which have central theme. Each reading passage is followed by reading converted the most important grammatical points essential for EFL students this level of study. Each part consists of two stages: presentation and practice. At the presentation stage students have the opportunity to get familiar with a particular grammatical point and at the practice stage they have the chance of measuring their understanding by doing a sequence of tasks.
